Dear Dr. Thirring:

More than a year ago when I was in London, Mr. Walter Harrap spoke with enthusiasm about your forthcoming book on the subject of power. Mr. Harrap's father and my father used to do business together in the nineteenth century, so you can see that I take Walter's advice most seriously! We have had an opportunity to see some, but not all, of the proofs of this book, and eventually we hope that it can be arranged for us to publish it on this side.

This morning Walter cabled me the good news that you yourself are here now, and will be until December 1. Perhaps this does not give much time to intrude in your busy schedule, but I would certainly like to meet you before you go back. Is there any chance that we could get together Wednesday, November 30? Perhaps you could join me at my Club, The Players, 16 Gramercy Park, where I would like to proffer you a stirrup cup!

(I hope we can reach you in time. I am going to ask Miss MacLeod to try to get this message to you by telephone, and I'll mail it special delivery.)

Sincerely yours,

Robert L. Crowellrlc:mm
